The Principia.

First Principles in Religion, Morals, Government, and the Economy of Life

VOL. II.—NO. 5 NEW-YORK SATURDAY DECEMBER 12, 1868. WHOLE NUMBER 37.

The Principia

Published Weekly on the Third Street, (two doors above Dupont,) Southern New York.

WESTON DANIEL, Editor.

ALBERT WEBB, PRINTER.

TERMS: One Dollar a year in advance.

Other Continental Subscribers will be charged 50 cents.

ADDRESS: R. S. WILLIAMS, PUBLISHING AGENT, 36 Bible House.

PROSPECTUS.

[illegible]

THE BIBLE ABOLITIONIST!

[illegible]

"Thus the law and the testimony. If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. viii. 20. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." "That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

Part II.—Of Slavery—Its Nature and Character, as Defined and Described by the Slave States themselves.

CHAPTER I.

IT IS CARDINAL PRINCIPLE, HUMAN CHATTLEHOOD, PROPERTY IN MAN—WORKINGS OF THE PRINCIPLE.

What is slavery? It is the Slavery existing in America, that we are considering. Its definition is to be found in its own Code—Bl statutes, its judicial decisions, its characteristic usages and customs.

IT IS CARDINAL PRINCIPLE—HUMAN CHATTLEHOOD.

"A slave is one who is in the power of a master to whom he belongs.—Louisiana Civil Code (Art. 35) "The slave is entirely subject to the will of his master.—Ib. Art. 175.

Slaves shall be deemed, sold, taken, reputed and adjudged in law to be chattels personal in the hands of their owners and possessors, and their executors, administrators, and assigns, to all intents, constructions and purposes whatsoever." (Law of South Carolina. 2 Brevard's Digest 229. Prince's Digest, 446 &c.)

"This is the great principle of slavery, that the slave is not to be ranked among sentient beings but among things as an article of property a chattel personal. Adams on the Bible's law. 41 all of these Bible—Adam's Sketch p. 27.

"It is plain from the definition of the matter in an unknown, all of that which is declared by the laws to be any chattel consists in relation to human beings, in contradiction to the two words of the divine law." (Ib. p. 24.)

"This is a chattel for ever—no deed, force, [illegible] by the Courts, authorized by the Scriptures which, and are good to all the Angels of daily pastoral among slave, mothers. All as other Slavery than this, or any American state legal.

"Patrick Farrington, in the Court of Cow Creek of Illinois says—How needs from the chattel that they "this earth" were as significant, [illegible] of property as other slaves or cattle? Bishop Cook, in the [illegible] appeal to the U. S. Senate, in 1836, said—"I know that there is a necessary degree [illegible] that cannot be [illegible] of property. I shall not argue the point, [illegible] slaves. Here [illegible] property [illegible] property. The human [illegible] [illegible] and the [illegible] property."

"Thus the Bible—Adam's Sketch p. 27. "Slaves are [illegible] property, [illegible] "Slaves are [illegible] property." "Slaves have [illegible] and [illegible] the Constitution. "The slaves are [illegible] property." "Slaves are [illegible] property." "Slaves are [illegible] property." " shall I discuss this?" Job xl. 2, xiv. 14. "Who shall stand in his place? [meaning, not [illegible] the minister, but the people's representatives]" Jer. 9. 42. "Those which are wise [meaning, they poor in the sense. Ex. 23. 6.

The law of God, in the Bible, reserves the equal and impartial protection of the persons and of the personal rights of all men, without distinction, making no difference between [illegible] and [illegible] rich and poor, white and colored, native Americans. The other Code is the code of man's [illegible] plan. So that of the plan is from God, then [illegible] the wisdom and power of God is confuted.

For the Principia.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY.

New York

The opinion independent thinking of the right of every man. People assume that the object of government is, it is the standard for our adoption. If you would establish despotism, rather than republicanism, bring the people to a belief of [illegible] government [illegible] from those who [illegible] to their [illegible]. The experimental popular sovereignty [illegible] Slavery. No people will, state slavery [illegible] to be founded by law which shall be the slaves, and who the masters. Slavery never was and never will be established by a free exercise of popular sovereignty in which all are equally of liberty to vote, and equally liable to the consequences. He who favors slavery intends that others and not himself shall be its victims. In all cases, slavery is that of power against weakness, which it is the mission of government to prevent. The Federal Constitution expresses the popular sentiment of the nation at the time of its adoption. It is not such an instrument as a people might adopt for their own common benefit and security, and not at all like any which a portion of them might devise for oppressing another portion. It is the rule by which they chose to govern and be governed, and by which they intended to keep the government in their own hands. If any of them entertained a purpose of reversing the legitimate use of government by taking it support ruffianly power against weakness, that purpose was contradicted by the instrument. It is, however, sought to make the Constitution serve such a purpose. Its own language interposes a difficulty. If it is assumed to mean just what it says, and all whom the sovereign people appoint to administer it, are lost to their own independent judgment of its meaning, what are those powers of [illegible]? Hence the clumsy device of having other men, judges of the Supreme Court, explain the Constitution and having all the rest of the people's servants learn its meaning from all them. What is its plea for this monopoly of [illegible]? A writer on the Government of the United States, gives the following information—

"The important object of a Supreme Court of the United States, is, as a uniform meaning or interpretation may be given to the Constitution and laws of the United States. The Court has, besides a law, be Constitutional, another may declare it to be unconstitutional. In one State the Constitution may be taken to mean one thing, in another quite another thing. But when the case comes before the Supreme Court, and is there decided, such decision governs the judgments of all inferior courts throughout the Union."

The argument of this extract is plausible enough to be very confusing people who do not understand the necessity of watching jealously against judicial usurpation. But we may easily see that if the Constitution is interpreted as some functionary are required to be it adopts of very little of any, [illegible] of Interpretation. No material diversity can be made, simply by being upon it constructions which its language repels. Such construction is not interpretation but subversion. The Constitution itself would determine all matters discussed to administer it according to its own rules, the establishment of justice. On the other hand a decision of the Supreme Court has not known to be [illegible] or ambiguous, as to need an interpretation to some other court, in case that lawyers might agree in their understanding of it. Was authorized the Supreme Court to interpret [illegible] other courts a sufficient [illegible] interpretation? Not the Constitution. That would be an [illegible] to interpret the Constitution for Congress or the State Legislature than for another court. Jefferson is writing to a friend a out a [illegible] said:

"You ask, in page 84 and 148, to consider the judges as the ultimate arbiters of all constitutional questions, a very dangerous doctrine indeed, and one which would place us under the tribunal. If a corporeity. Our judges are as honest as other men and not more so. They have with them, the same passions for party, for power, and the privileges of their corps. Their power is the more dangerous as they are independent, and their power the more dangerous they are [illegible] to office for life and not responsible to the functionaries not to the elective control. The Constitution has given to the judiciary a power, knowing that to their ever hands confided with the decision of the constitutional [illegible] its meaning would [illegible] despotic. It has been wisely made all departments equal and each independent within themselves."

I. S.

For the Principia

MR. GIDDINGS ON NEGRO SUFFRAGE.

Mr Giddings writes to the Ashtabula Sentinel on the question of negro suffrage

"I have always opposed introducing into the Republican platform any doubtful issue. The right of suffrage is not a natural right. God never gave the right of suffrage or of holding office, to an infant who never dreamed of voting or holding office. Yet He has given the infant and the female a right to live and we hang a man for murdering infants or females, precisely as for murdering men. We protect the negro precisely as we protect our wives, our children, ourselves for the law of Ohio that protects my life and liberty, protect that of the negro to precisely the same extent."

Mr. Giddings claims to be a Republican, on principle, and professes to base his opposition to slavery on higher grounds than those which influence ordinary politicians. He can regard the question of negro suffrage in the light of a "doubtful issue," only on the ground of expediency

Mr Gidding's reasoning does not materially differ from that of the slaveholders. The slaveholder says, because I supply the physical wants of my slaves, and because I am bound, by law, to take care of them in sickness and old age, therefore, I have a right to hold and treat them as property, to deny to them the rights of education, manhood marriage, and everything that makes life desirable.

Mr. Giddings says, because the laws in some of the States protect the negro in some of his rights, therefore, it is no crime to rob him of all those rights not secured to him by law. The granting to the negro his natural rights, purchases the privilege of justly denying to him all other rights. It is not easy to show wherein this logic of Mr Giddings when carried to its final results, differs materially from the maxim of Henry Clay, that "what the law makes property is property." The negro is at the bottom of the well surrounded by the cold damps of death, the theory of Mr Giddings is, that, in order to get him raised up near to the top, where the air is more pure, where he can open his eyes to the partial light of day, and feel to some extent, the genial heat of the sun, it must be affirmed, as a dogma, that he should not be lifted entirely out of the well, and have his feet placed in terra firma, where he can snuff the inspiring breeze, and be warmed into a vigorous life by the direct rays of the sun or at least, that this is a doubtful issue.

Mr Giddings was the very man who in the Chicago Convention, very properly insisted on having engrafted into the Republican Platform, the extract from the Declaration of Independence "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Now, Mr Giddings will admit that the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness included and carried with it, the right to use the means necessary to maintain and perpetuate these blessings; and we will suppose the right of suffrage as among the most important of these means, especially when he asserts in the latter clause of the above extract "that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

It cannot be assumed that Mr. Giddings regards the question of negro suffrage a doubtful issue, on the ground that a negro is a man. Upon what principle of justice does he deny to the negro, being a native American, the right of suffrage, which he certainly admits to be proper, including the colored Americans from every country of the Globe Except African? Although the free colored of no American class, after a residence of [illegible] years, are now [illegible] Mr. Giddings has no more reason to deny the negro suffrage, supposing him a native American, than a native born Chinese, or Hottentot, or any other native born of a free colored American, simply because he is a negro.

Slavery is the [illegible] and the [illegible] to call in a great point of quality, the [illegible] to whom platform is residence, is the [illegible] the Constitution of the United States, of the whole [illegible] from the free States, and [illegible] the colored [illegible] the [illegible] and take from [illegible] the right of suffrage, as an [illegible] to [illegible] Democratic Republican [illegible] Affirmation in the free States is purely political and [illegible] then in the slave States, and must work of [illegible] in the [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible]. How can Mr. Giddings [illegible] pass the above step to make the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

WHY AM CONVERTED AT CHURCH (TO WIT).

Mr. Chauncey was expounding the matter of holding an Abolition meeting under the auspices of the Congregational Church of Hartford, when the following dialogue took place between the Pastor and the Deacon, as reported in the Hartford Courant:

Pastor—Brother Deacon, I understand that you are converted at church. Why do you think so?

Deacon—Because I am. I was converted at church because I was converted there.

Pastor—Why do you think you are converted at church

The Principia.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1860.

LESSONS OF HISTORY.

Whatever others may have well said, the philosophy teaching by example. A more sound and comprehensive expression of the thought would be, that history is Divine Providence teaching the nature and tendencies of moral causes by their working the same and precisely in similar circumstances. "God is in history." Man too, is in history and he who wishes to know God, or "study man" or neither of these can be known or studied, effectually, without knowing and studying the other; must study history, without knowing and studying the other; must study history, and must do it with the thought uppermost in his mind, that he is taking lessons from the Omniscient Teacher himself, who knew the end from the beginning, and who arranged the great events of human events, for the grand purposes of humanity.

Of all the sensitive objections ever made to the divine inspiration of the Scriptures, one of the most shallow is that which assumes, "A great part of the Bible is only history." Only history! Just as though the historical parts of Scripture were mere blanks, that could be spared! Just as though there could be an adequate or credible divine revelation that should not embody large portions of history! For our own part, if we were about to write an argument in proof of the divine inspiration of the Scriptures, the historical portions of them should furnish one of the prominent stand-points of our observations—not so much for the mere purpose of showing the fulfilment of Scripture prophecy—a task which has been triumphantly accomplished already—as for the purpose of bringing out the lessons of super-human wisdom which are taught in that history, as taught by no other.

Alas! that the churches and the ministry have profited so little by those divine lessons that lie neglected in their Bibles, which they seem to venerate, but forget to study! Well would it have been for our now distracted country if Christian ministers had even tried to teach their flocks the uses of Bible history in directing their political activities and thus controlling the destiny of their nation.

But it is not enough to study Bible history. All authentic history, so far as it is a trust-worthy record of facts, is the history of divine Providence, teaching the nature and tendencies of moral causes, in the effects that have been produced by them. When studied by those who have first learned to study Bible history in the light of Bible theology and then study history, becomes impregnated with the animus, as to practical, of Bible history, and answers to really well as a substitute for an inspired continuation of it, showing that the things that occur in substance, is the thing that has been, in the past ages, and that, in a sense, there is no new things under the sun.

Moral causes are active as are at work now in this country, and have been working, from the beginning of our nation's history, very much in the same way and precisely in accordance with the same divine laws of retributive justice as in the ancient nations whose history, intermingled and alternated with prophecy, is recorded in the Bible. To have studied and learned those records would have been to have anticipated the otherwise necessary recurrence of the same results that were before witnessed, and which must now and be expected therefore for the admonition and instruction of the ages that are to come after us. If the terrible calamities inflicted on Egypt, upon Babylon, upon Assyria, upon Phenicia, upon Edom, upon Israel and upon Judah, were called to admonish and save our nation, then we believe it is our national overthrow, or terrible punishment, would be a. Which she repudiates the interpretation of her union with the other States, that repudiates her independence of course and treats it as a sham.

South Carolina's "Declaration of Independence" was not only a declaration of her independence of the United States, but it was also a declaration of the fundamental rights of the race, consequently of all the men in South Carolina, and in appeal to the "Supreme Judge of the World for the rectitude of her intentions" to establish a government "for the security of these rights," a government "deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed"—"whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends." So that, in seceding from the Union, South Carolina will unbind our State government, and begin anew with "all men" as a constituency, to help organize.

Back of all this history we find South Carolina represented in the Old Continental Congress in 1774, participating in forming the "Articles of Association" of the United Colonies—no States—establishing strong powers of Congress over the Colonies; a Congress exercising the right to regulate commerce, pass Non Importation Acts, and especially interdicting the importation of slaves. On behalf of South Carolina, these articles were signed by Henry Middleton, Thomas Lynch, Christopher Gadsden, John Rutledge, and Edward Rutledge—as many names save one as her present representation in Congress.

Every South Carolinian, black or white, land or free, is a citizen of the United States, entitled to Federal protection, for the Federal Constitution, like the old Articles of Confederation of 1778, the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Association, and the Gospel of the New Testament, knows nothing of race or complexion, and nothing of bond or free.

As to the bugbear of coercion, civil war, &c. all this is dispelled simply by remembering that the slaveholders are not South Carolina, that a majority of the people of South Carolina are colored, that a very large majority of the whites are non-slaveholders. A national proclamation of protection to these, as the Constitution requires, would settle the question with less difficulty or loss of blood, than it would cost to enforce a liquor prohibition bill in this city.

It is this North, not the South, that needs to be abolitionized.

THE DISCUSSIONS IN WILLIAMSBURGH, on Civil Government, at the First Congregational Church, (Rev. S. S. Jocelyn's) are to be continued on Tuesday evenings, at ½ past 7 o'clock.

The second question, discussed last Tuesday evening was

'What is Civil Government—and what are its objects?'

The third question, for next Tuesday evening, is:

'On whom do the responsibilities of Civil Government rest?'

Ladies and gentlemen attend these meetings. Admittance gratis—Seats free.

DISTRIBUTION. In the Chancery. Sale for distribution and partition of our land worth [illegible] Thursday the [illegible] day of [illegible] Page the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] of the Constitution [illegible] whether an adjunct has power which [illegible] military force, and a proposition [illegible] responsibility will be [illegible] and [illegible] of his legal and just authority.

The same [illegible] are [illegible] which are administered by the officers and employed by the agents of the Government of the United States, [illegible] against the United States or its property, or [illegible] under the laws of the United States, and [illegible] the enforcement of such laws, [illegible] some with the [illegible] of military force. [illegible] the [illegible] to execute the laws, [illegible] to execute the laws of the State. [illegible] the [illegible] in a manner [illegible] the laws of the State. [illegible] the [illegible] of the United States [illegible] the laws of the United States [illegible] the laws of the State [illegible] the laws of the United States [illegible] the laws of the State [illegible] the laws of the United States [illegible] the laws of the State

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

Family Miscellany.

SABBATH IN THE COUNTRY

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]